CareerCast.com has analysed and ranked 200 careers according to five criteria: physical demands, income, stress, work environment and hiring outlook

It's official, I have the worst job in the world.

That's according to a new survey by the website CareerCast.com, who have analysed and ranked 200 careers and found the lowly news reporter to be the worst.

The jobs were ordered according to five criteria: physical demands, income, stress, work environment and hiring outlook, with long hours, low salaries and dwindling hiring and career progression prospects ensuring news reporters prop up the list.

Other careers in the bottom 10 include lumberjack, enlisted military personnel, actor, oil rig worker, dairy farmer, meter reader, postman, roofer, flight attendant and farmer.

Prospects were considerably better for actuaries however, as a pleasant work environment, low stress levels and strong hiring outlook suggests life is sweet for people who interpret statistics to determine the probability of accidents, sickness and deaths.

Biomedical engineers, software engineers, audiologists, financial planners and dental hygienists have equally cushy lives according to Career Cast, with a strong hiring outlook the major factor in the results.

According to Career Cast's publisher Tony Lee, a severe shortage of actuaries has dramatically increased wages in a job that already scored highly for low stress levels and pleasant work environment.

On the subject of news reporters scoring so low, Mr Lee said: "What probably pushed it to the bottom is that several things got worse. Job prospects decreased, the average salary continued to fall and work hours continued to rise. Those factors make the job more stressful."

Sentence Translation

A possible translation of the marked sentence:

The jobs were ordered according to five criteria: physical demands, income, stress, work environment and hiring outlook, with long hours, low salaries and dwindling hiring and career progression prospects ensuring news reporters prop up the list.

Az állásokat öt kritérium szerint tették sorba: fizikai terhelés, bevétel, stressz, munka körülmények, és álláskeresési kilátások. A hosszú munkaidő, az alacsony fizetések és az egyre csökkenő munka- és előrelépési lehetőségek biztosítják a riporterek sereghajtó szerepét.
